

Feet ----- By Max Crispin

Feet are such marvellous things
Not like a motor car at all
They'll walk you around and around and very rarely ever stall;

Feet will go for miles and miles
They'll hop, and jump, kick and leap
They'll get to the end of a road
Whether flat, rough, or even steep;

Feet start at the ankle
They have 10 toes and so if you want to go from here to there
Feet are always ready to go;

We have our arms and hands of course
And use them quite a lot
But feet are good for locomotion
Arms can't hop, jump, kick, or even trot;

Four feet will always be at the end
No matter if rain, or snow, or heat
What a marvelous invention they are
But why did they call them feet.

HMS Dreadnought - 1584

The History of Manure:

In the 16th and 17th centuries, everything had to be transported by ship and it was also before the invention of commercial fertilizers, so large shipments of manure were quite common.

It was shipped dry, because in dry form it weighed a lot less than when wet, but once water (at sea) hit it, not only did it become heavier, but the process of fermentation began again, of which a by product is methane gas of course. As the stuff was stored below decks in bundles, you can see what could (and did) happen.

Methane began to build up below decks and the first time someone came below at night with a lantern, and BOOOOM!

Several ships were destroyed in this manner before it was determined just what was happening.

After that, the bundles of manure were always stamped with the instruction 'stow high in transit' on them, which meant for the sailors to stow it high enough off the lower decks so that any water that came into the hold would not touch this volatile cargo and start the production of methane.

Thus evolved the term 'S.H.I.T', (Stow High In Transit) which has come down through the centuries and is in use to this very day.

You probably did not know the true history of the word. Neither did I.

I had always thought it was a golf term.
